Overview

Here's your answer: owners of storage facility businesses typically earn a yearly profit of $184,500. It can cost as high as $75,000 to start a storage. The answer depends on factors like location, demand, operational efficiency, and pricing strategies. Unlike other real estate investments, storage units have lower maintenance costs, high occupancy rates, and recession-resistant demand. How to Get Started with Storage Unit Flipping: Research local auctions, set a budget, and create a resale. Today, we're breaking it down with a real-life case study: a 50,000-square-foot storage facility that we purchased for $2. Approve who rents and the hours of access. Sit back and collect automatic payments each month.
