

Why do photovoltaic panels have lifespan requirements

Overview

The lifespan of a solar panel is closely linked to its annual degradation, meaning the physiological loss of efficiency year after year. Premium panels deliver superior long-term value: While premium panels with 0.25% degradation rates cost 10-20% more upfront, they produce 11.5% more electricity over 25 years compared to standard panels, often justifying the higher initial investment through extended productive life and better. Solar panels typically last 25 to 30 years, but they don't just stop working after this timeframe. 9% of their capacity each year. This longevity surpasses that of many other household systems, such as boilers, which usually have a life. The lifespan of a photovoltaic system does not only concern the "useful life" of the panels, but also their performance over time, the quality of the components, and the environmental factors that influence efficiency. Most are backed by 25- to 30-year performance warranties, and in real-world conditions, many keep producing power well beyond that.
